Kristine Moore, an attorney, is Assistant General Counsel at Michigan State University, where she practices according to a MSU web site primarily in the areas of Clery and Violence Against Women Act compliance, disability law, Fair Labor Standards Act and other employment law issues. Kristine is a frequent speaker in the area of employment law.

In 2014 Kristine Moore as a MSU Title IX investigator handled the sexual assault complaint filed by MSU grad student Amanda Thomashow against Larry Nassar, D.O. Standard Title IX regulations call for a single report to be issued to all parties involved in a complaint. Ms. Thomashow received a copy of the report, but was not aware of the fact that Ms. Moore wrote a second report more critical of Dr. Larry Nassar that Dr. Nassar received, and it was also delivered to Dr. Nassar's boss William Strampel, D.O., Dean of the MSU School of Osteopathic Medicine.

From what has been reported in the press it seems that Ms. Moore's primary goal was to protect MSU from liability due to Larry Nassar's sexual assault on Ms. Thomashow and probably others. She had a difficult task and the end result of her work is even greater liability facing MSU. She failed because she did not know the extent of Larry Nassar's criminal activity and did not want to know because of the huge liability facing MSU if he was exposed. More importantly moving forward she did not understand that perverted sexual pedophile predators like Larry Nassar will not stop on their own. She thought that the warning she issued about Nassar being a liability in the second report to Nassar and Strampel would be sufficient to stop him. She did not know that Strampel would not monitor Nassar after he placed Nassar back into the MSU Sports Medicine Clinic. That enabled Nassar to abuse girls for two more years from 2014 to 2016, which is now a huge liability for MSU.

So, Ms. Moore did an improper, substandard, and biased investigation to dismiss and discredit Ms. Thomashow and her accusations. She gathered a lot of what turns out to be biased bogus evidence based medicine to support Larry Nassar's criminal conduct as being valid medical treatment and pooh-pooh the complaint. Ms. Thomashow stated in her lawsuit against Nassar that Moore's report left out two critical facts: that Nassar had an erection while touching her, and that he refused to stop until she physically removed his hands. Moore's investigation ultimately cleared Nassar of sexual misconduct. Moore told Ms. Thomashow she had misunderstood the “nuanced difference” between sexual touching and legitimate medical procedures.

Conclusion:

We the citizens of Michigan want Kristine Moore immediately terminated from employment at MSU, a great public Michigan university.
